

Daniel P. Burridge (Danny) is the new Executive Director of MARCC. He is a public sociologist who has specialized in the study and practice of community-led change using participatory action research and mixed methods analysis. He received his PhD in Sociology from the University of Pittsburgh in 2023 and most recently served as Acting Director and Research Scientist of the North Carolina Network for Safe Communities at the University of North Carolina Greensboro. Prior to that, he worked as the Youth Development Program Director for Santa Maria Community Services in Lower Price Hill, Cincinnati. As a scholar, his work has been published in various outlets including the International Journal of Comparative Sociology, Cambridge Elements, and the Journal of World-Systems Research. As a practitioner, he has co-led violence prevention and community-building programs in the US and El Salvador with a focus on merging academic insights and local knowledge to empower grassroots initiatives.
